

A Guide to Making Complaints

About this guide

This guide has been produced to help you understand more about the process for making complaints to various services and organisations if you are unhappy with the service you have received. We also want you to know about the support that is available to you locally.

Whilst we do our best to make sure this guide is up to date and contains correct information we accept no responsibility incorrect information or the quality of service and advice you receive from external organisations listed in this guide.

How to make a complaint

Each organisation or service will have its own complaints policy and procedure which should be followed.

We recommend you ask for a copy of this.

In this there will be information of where to make your complaint to and when you can expect to receive a response.

Complaints should always be raised to the organisation or service in the first instance to give them the opportunity to put things right as soon as possible. This is often called Local Resolution.

Top Tips for making a complaint:

- ü Raise your concern or complaint as soon as possible. There may be a time limit for lodging your concerns.
- ü Be clear and concise about what you are unhappy about and keep your complaint as brief as possible.
- ü Provide clear information about your complaint, including facts of what happened, names of people involved and any evidence that you may have- including copies of letters relating to your complaint.
- ü Explain the impact of the issue on you.
Highlight any legislation that you feel has been breached.
- ü Be clear about what solution you are looking for to enable the service to have the opportunity to put things right.
- ü Ask them to outline how and when they will respond to you.
- ü Keep copies of letters, correspondence and calls in relation to your complaint.
- ü Explore what options you have for escalating your complaint if you are unhappy with the outcome.

Escalating your Complaint to an Ombudsman

Ombudsman services are independent organisations that generally operate as a final stage of complaints against a specific service or organisation. They are impartial and investigate complaints to identify fault and explore a remedy. Complaints must have been lodged with the organisation initially to enable them to have the opportunity to investigate the concern and make the matter right.

It is important to check directly with the particular Ombudsman as to when they may consider investigating your complaint however this generally happens when complaints have not been responded to within a set period or they have been fully investigated and you remain dissatisfied with the outcome.

It is up to the individual Ombudsman service to identify if they are willing to investigate your complaint and they will advise you of this decision.

If your complaint remains unresolved after eight weeks you can ask the Housing Ombudsman to resolve your complaint.

Your complaint can also be referred to the Housing Ombudsman service by the designated person if they feel this is required.

If the dispute cannot be resolved within two months, or if you and your landlord do not wish to take part in the early resolution process, the Housing Ombudsman will investigate the complaint.
